The chemistry of some solutes in natural water is reasonably well understood. For others, much remains to be learned. New research results will tend to make many statements made here subject to rather rapid obsolescence. This is one reason for keeping the discussions of individual constituents generalized and rather brief. Nature of the Dissolved State The discussions so far have presupposed ...

The chemistry of wastewater reflects human activities. Industrial, agricultural, and municipal activities are represented by the wastewater produced in each. Due to its value and scarcity, wastewater is treated, discharged to a receiving stream, and withdrawn for reuse by the downstream population. Consequently, the chemical and bacteriological composition must be monitored to ensure the ...

Water chemistry analyses are carried out to identify and quantify the chemical components and properties of water samples. The type and sensitivity of the analysis depends on the purpose of the analysis and the anticipated use of the water. Chemical water analysis is carried out on water used in industrial processes, on waste-water stream, on rivers and stream, on rainfall and on the sea. In all cases the results of the analysis provides information that can be used to make decisions or to provi
