Revival of The Genetical Theory: By the time of Fisher's death in 1962, The Genetical Theory had thus had only a limited direct influence. Like Mendel's work, its fame now rests more on the influence it should have had, rather than the influence it did have. It lay fallow for just as long as did Mendel's paper. The publication of the second edition in 1958, however, made it more widely ...

The Genetical Theory of Natural Selection is a book by Ronald Fisher which combines Mendelian genetics with Charles Darwin's theory of natural selection,[1] with Fisher being the first to argue that "Mendelism therefore validates Darwinism"[2] and stating with regard to mutations that "The vast majority of large mutations are deleterious; small ...

The first theory claims that aging is related to mutations which are related to long-term survival and that aging is related to the accumulation of genetic mutations which are not repaired. Another theory is that aging is related to the late effects of certain genes, and is referred to as pleiotropic antagonism.

The Genetic Theory of Aging, Concepts, and Evidence

The genetical theory of MLS resolves this problem by considering that natural selection acts only upon the heritable portion of the phenotype; that is, the character under selection is strictly genetical. Importantly, any biological entity that contains genes may be ascribed a trait value that is a simple weighted sum of the frequencies of the various alleles that it carries, irrespective of ...
