BAD MOONS, LITTLE DREAMS Time present and time past Are both perhaps present in time future And time future contained in time past. T. S. Eliot, 'Burnt Norton', Four Quartets (1936) History is often said to be a catalogue of human sorrows, an unending story of bootlicking, a slaughterhouse of crimes. It is not always so. The mould of cruel servitude can be shattered, as happened 2600 years ago ...

The Death and Life of Great American Cities

Death is an event in which your biological functions cease and cannot be restarted by any possible medical intervention: a fatal heart attack followed by cremation, for example. To have life after death is to exist following such an event in a conscious state, with a mental life recognizably similar to the one you had before you died "enabling
